Ralph Fitzwilliam was a baron. Fitzwilliam was the son of William Fitzralph of Grimthorpe in Yorkshire, and of his wife Joan, daughter of Thomas de Greystock. In 1277 he served on behalf of his uncle, William de Greystock, in the Welsh war, and again on his own account in 1282, and in 1287 against the same enemy. In 1291 he was first summoned to serve against the Scots, and in 1295 was first summoned to parliament. In July 1297 he was appointed captain of the royal garrisons in Northumberland, and for his services against the Scots thanked in November, during this month he was also appointed one of the captains of the Scottish marches. In 1298 he was put at the head of the troops levied in Yorkshire. He was constantly serving against Scotland and in parliament. In 1300 he was at the siege of Caerlaverock. In the Old French/Anglo Norman of the epic poem of Caerlaverock, he is named Rauf le FitzGuilleme In 1301 he signed as 'lord of Grimthorpe' the letter of the barons at the Lincoln parliament to the pope. He was also employed as a representative of the East Riding before the exchequer in 1300, and as the king's agent empowered to 'use all friendly ways' to exact a purveyance of grain from the Yorkshire monasteries in 1302. In 1304 he was commissioned with John de Barton to act as a justice to execute the statute of 'trailbaston' in Yorkshire. In the reign of Edward II he attached himself to the baronial opposition. In 1309 he was appointed a justice to receive in Northumberland complaints of prizes taken contrary to the statute of Stamford. In 1313 he was among the adherents of Thomas of Lancaster who received a pardon for their complicity in the death of Gaveston. In the same year he was made 'custos' of Cumberland, and in 1314 one of the justices of oyer and terminer in Cumberland and Westmoreland for the trial of offenders indicted before the conservators of the peace. In January 1315 the magnates of the north appointed him one of the wardens of the marches. The king ratified their choice, and nominated him captain and warden of Newcastle upon Tyne and of all Northumberland. In March 1315 he was also made captain and warden of Carlisle and of the adjoining marches. In June 1316 he was appointed one of the wardens to defend Yorkshire against the Scots. The last writ addressed to him as a commissioner of array was on 15 September 1316. He died soon after, apparently about November, certainly before February 1317, and is said to have been buried in Nesham Priory, Durham (Dugdale). Fitzwilliam inherited and acquired very considerable estates in Northumberland, Yorkshire, and Cumberland. In 1296 he was declared nearest heir to Gilbert Fitzwilliam. In 1303 he got one-fourth of the manors in Northumberland belonging to John Yeland (ib. p. 646). In 1306 he succeeded to the estates of his cousin John de Greystock, for the repose of whose soul he founded a chantry at Tynemouth.

Bartholomew de Badlesmere (Guncelin²⁵, Bartholomew²⁶, Gunselm²⁷) born 1275 in Chilham Castle, Kent died April 14, 1322 in Leeds Castle, Kent. English nobleman, was the son and heir of Gunselm de Badlesmere (died 1301), and fought in the English army both in France and Scotland during the later years of the reign of Edward I of England. In 1307 he became governor of Bristol Castle. Edward II appointed him steward of his household. Badlesmere made a compact with some other noblemen to gain supreme influence in the royal council. Although very hostile to Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, Badlesmere helped to make peace between the king and the earl in 1318, and was a member of the middle party which detested alike Edward's minions, like the Despencers, and his violent enemies like Lancaster. The king's conduct, however, drew him to the side of the earl, and he had already joined Edward's enemies when, in October 1321, his wife, Margaret de Clare, Lady Badlesmere refused to admit Queen Isabella to her husband's castle at Leeds in Kent. The king assaulted and captured the castle, seized and imprisoned Lady Badlesmere, and civil war began. After the defeat of the Earl of Lancaster at the Battle of Boroughbridge, Badlesmere was captured, attainted, and hanged at Blean near Canterbury on April 14, 1322. His head was displayed on the Burgh Gate at Canterbury.

This nobleman, in the life-time of his father, having been taken prisoner in the wars of Scotland, (9th Edward I.) obtained from the king, in consideration of his services there, the grant of one hundred pounds towards the liquidation of his ransom. He was subsequently much engaged in the Scottish wars, and in the 24th of the same reign was constable of the English army in that country. The next year he was by indenture retained to serve Roger le Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, with six knights, himself accounted, as well in time of peace as in war, for the term of his whole life, in England, Wales, and Scotland; in time of peace with six horses, so long as the earl should think fit, taking Bouche of Court for himself and his knights, and for his esquires, hay and oats; as also livery for six more horses, and wages for six, grooms and their horses; likewise for himself two robes yearly, as well in time of peace as war, as for a banneret; and for his five knights, as for his other bachelors « vis. » two yearly. Moreover, in time of war he was bound to bring with him his five knights with twenty horses; and in consideration thereof, to receive for himself and his company, with all those horses, forty shillings per day, but if he should bring no more than six horses, then thirty-two shillings: it being likewise agreed that the horses should be valued, to the end that a fair allowance might be made for any which should be lost in the i service. For the performance of this covenant he had a grant of the manor of Lodene, in the county of Norfolk. In the 96th of Edward I. his lordship was again in Scotland, and had a principal command at the battle of Falkirk. In three years after he obtained license to make a castle at his manor house, of Bretteby, in the county of Derby, and he was next constituted governor of Berwick-upon-Tweed as also warden of Scotland. Subsequently we find him with King Edward at the celebrated siege of Caerlaverok. After the accession of Edward II he was again made warden of Scotland, and within a short time, attending the king into that usual theatre of war, was amongst the worsted in the great defeat sustained by the English at Bannockburn, and was made prisoner by the Scots, who detained him for a year, until he was exchanged for Thomas de Moram, and other prisoners of that realm, who were incarcerated in London. His lordship eventually lost his life in Gascony, whither he was sent by the king, who had conceived some displeasure against him, for the escape of Roger Mortimer out of the Tower of London, under pretence of defending those parts, with Edmund, Earl of Kent, and others; where, being a great mortality, he died 1325.

Gilbert de Clare (Richard²⁵, Gilbert²⁶, Richard²⁷, Roger²⁸, Richard FitzGilbert²⁹, Gilbert FitzRichard³⁰, _) 6th Earl of Hertford, 7th Earl of Gloucester born September 2, 1243 in Christchurch, Hampshire died December 7, 1295 in Monmouthshire. A powerful English noble. Also known as "Red" Gilbert de Clare, probably because of his hair color. He held the Lordship of Glamorgan which was one of the most powerful and wealthy of the Welsh Marcher Lordships as well as over 200 English manors (172 in the Honor of Clare). During the Second Barons' War in April 1264, Gilbert de Clare led the massacre of the Jews at Canterbury, as Simon de Montfort's supporters had done elsewhere. Gilbert de Clare's castles of Kingston and Tonbridge were taken by the King, Henry III. However, the King allowed de Clare's Countess Alice de Lusignan, who was in the latter, to go free because she was his niece; but on 12 May de Clare and de Montfort were denounced as traitors. On 20 October 1264, Gilbert and his associates were excommunicated by Pope Clement IV, and his lands placed under an interdict. In the following month, by which time they had obtained possession of Gloucester and Bristol, the Earl was proclaimed to be a rebel. However at this point he changed sides as he fell out with de Montfort and the Earl, in order to prevent de Montfort's escape, destroyed ships at the port of Bristol and the bridge over the River Severn at Gloucester. Having changed sides, de Clare shared the Prince's victory at Kenilworth on 16 July, and in the Battle of Evesham, 4 August, in which de Montfort was slain, he commanded the second division and contributed largely to the victory. On 24 June 1268 he took the Cross at Northampton in repentance and contrition for his past misdeeds. In October 1265, as a reward for supporting Prince Edward, Gilbert was given the castle and title of Abergavenny and honor and castle of Brecknock. At Michaelmas his disputes with Llewelyn the Last were submitted to arbitration, but without a final settlement. Meanwhile, he was building Caerphilly Castle into a fortress. On 6 October 1265 he received the papal absolution of his excommunication, and on 9 October that year the pardon of the King for his former support of Montfort. At the end of the year 1268 he refused to obey the King's summons to attend parliament, alleging that, owing to the constant inroads of Llewelyn the Last, his Welsh estates needed his presence for their defense. At the death of Henry III, 16 November 1272, the Earl took the lead in swearing fealty to Edward I, who was then in Sicily on his return from the Crusade. The next day, with the Archbishop of York, he entered London and proclaimed peace to all, Christians and Jews, and for the first time, secured the acknowledgment of the right of the King's eldest son to succeed to the throne immediately. Thereafter he was joint Guardian of England, during the King's absence, and on the new King's arrival in England, in August 1274, entertained him at Tonbridge Castle. During Edward's invasion of Wales in 1282, de Clare insisted on leading an attack into southern Wales. King Edward made de Clare the commander of the southern army invading Wales. However, de Clare's army faced disaster after being heavily defeated at the Battle of Llandeilo Fawr. Following this defeat, de Clare was relieved of his position as the southern commander and was replaced by William de Valence, 1st Earl of Pembroke (whose son had died during the battle). In the next year, 1291, he quarreled with the Earl of Hereford, Humphrey de Bohun, 3rd Earl of Hereford, grandson of his onetime guardian, about the Lordship of Brecknock, where de Bohun accused de Clare of building a castle on his land culminated in a private war between them. Although it was a given right for Marcher Lords to wage private war the King tested this right in this case, first calling them before a court of their Marcher peers, then realizing the outcome would be colored by their likely avoidance of prejudicing one of their greatest rights they were both called before the superior court, the King's own. At this both were imprisoned by the King, both sentenced to having their lands forfeit for life and de Clare, the Earl of Gloucester, as the aggressor, was fined 10,000 marks, and the Earl of Hereford 1,000 marks. They were released almost immediately and both of their lands completely restored to them – however they had both been taught a very public lesson and their prestige diminished and the King's authority shown for all. He died at Monmouth Castle on 7 December 1295, and was buried at Tewkesbury Abbey, on the left side of his grandfather Gilbert de Clare.

He married twice. With Joan of Acre (King Edward I²⁵, Henry III²⁶, John I²⁷, Henry II²⁸, Geoffroy V²⁹, Fulk V³⁰, _) born April 1272 in Acre, Jerusalem died April 23, 1307 in

Stafford was made a Knight banneret in 1327 and was fighting the Scots shortly afterwards. He supported the plot to free Edward III of England from the control of Roger Mortimer, which earned the king's gratitude. By the summer of 1332, he was a commissioner of the peace in Staffordshire and had served abroad on royal business, accompanying Hugh de Audley, 1st Earl of Gloucester. He was also still fighting the Scots, commanding archers at the Battle of Dupplin Moor on 11 Aug 1332 and on three further Scottish campaigns. He was first summoned to Parliament by writ as Lord Stafford on 29 November 1336 and continued to attend until 1350. His military career continued, accompanying King Edward to France in 1338 as an advisor and being present at the naval battle of Sluys on 24 June 1340. He also fought at the relief of Brest and the siege of Morlaix. He was captured at Vannes but was exchanged in time to negotiate a truce at Malestroit. On 6 January 1341, he was made Steward of the Royal Household but resigned that post on 29 March 1345 having assumed the office of Seneschal of Aquitaine, an English possession in France, where he stayed for about a year. Further battles included the battle of Auberoche, the siege of Aiguillon, from where he escaped prior to its lifting, a raid on Barfleur and the English victory at the Battle of Crecy, on 26 August 1346. He became one of the twenty-six founding members and the fifth Knight of the Order of the Garter in 1348. Edward III created a number of new peerage titles to honour his war captains and to mark his jubilee year. Ralph was created the 1st Earl of Stafford on 5 March 1350, with an annuity of 1000 marks. He now replaced Henry of Grosmont, 1st Duke of Lancaster as the king's lieutenant in Gascony, he committed to serve with 200 men at his expense with the expectation of this being doubled in March 1353 at the king's expense. The campaigns provided several captives that were ransomed, but were ultimately unsuccessful, leading to the appointment of Edward, Prince of Wales to command.

Baron Henry de Percy (Baron Henry²⁵, Baron Henry²⁶, William²⁷, Henry²⁸, Joscelyn²⁹ de Louvain, Godfrey "The Bearded" of Louvaine³⁰ Barbutus, Henry II of³¹ Brabant, Count Labert II of³², Count Lambert I "The Bearded" of³³, Count Regnier III of Hainaut³⁴, Count Regnier II of Hainaut³⁵, Count Regnier I "Long-Neck" of Hainaut³⁶, Count Giselbert of Darnau³⁷, Count Giselbert of Massgau³⁸, Count Gainfroi³⁹, Duke Mainier of Austria⁴⁰_) was born in Leconfield, Yorkshire February 6, 1300. 8th Baron de Percy and 1st Lord Percy of Alnwick.

Henry became the owner of Alnwick in 1309 and was the head of a family which was directly descended from William de Percy, who had arrived in England in 1067 and had been granted extensive domains in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire and later in Sussex by William the Conquer.

When the Percys acquired the barony of Alnwick, from the Bishopric of Durham they became one of the most powerful families in England. Henry de Percy had already greatly distinguished himself in the Scottish wars, and had been rewarded with further lands by Edward I and Edward II. But he nevertheless joined the revolt of the barons against the latter, and was one of those chiefly concerned in the capture and execution of the King's favorite, Piers Gaveston. For this conduct his estates were confiscated by the King, but subsequently restored to him. He took part in Edward's invasion of Scotland in 1314, was taken prisoner at Bannockburn and ransomed shortly afterwards.

On becoming the owner and Baron of Alnwick, he immediately set about the restoration of the Castle, with a view to converting it into a stronghold provided with all the improvements required by the warfare of the Edwardian period. Without interfering with the general form and design of the Castle, the 1st Lord Percy of Alnwick proceeded to rebuild the greater part of it. He reconstructed the Keep in the form of seven semi-circular towers round an irregular-sided court, with the great hall and kitchens on the East Side, and he also rebuilt most of the towers along the curtain wall. Those portions of his work, which still remain, are the semi-circular tower on the north-east side of the Keep. This now forms part of the dining-room, the draw-well, the Middle Gateway between the Outer and Second Baileys, the Abbot's Tower, Western Garret, Auditor's Tower, Eastern Garret, the lower part of the Record Tower, the Constable's Tower and Postern Tower, as well as the greater part of the curtain walls.

He married Idoine de Clifford (Lord Robert²⁵ de Clifford, Sir Roger²⁶ Clifford, Sir Roger²⁷, Sir Roger²⁸, Baron Walter II²⁹) birth date unknown, and had the following children:

1. Thomas²³ de Percy.
1. Roger de Percy.
2. Margaret de Percy.
3. Isabel de Percy.
4. Robert de Percy.
5. William de Percy.
6. Eleanor de Percy.
7. Lord Henry de Percy was born 1320.

Baron Henry de Percy died February 1351. His body was interred Alnwick, Northumberland. Idoine died August 24, 1365. Her body was interred Beverley Minister, Yorkshire.

Earl Henry of Lancaster Plantaganet

(Edmund "Crouchback" Leicester²⁵, King Henry III²⁶, King John "Lackland" I²⁷, Duchess Eleanor of Aquitaine²⁸, Duke William X "The Toulousan" of Aquitaine²⁹, William IX "The Troubadour" of Aquitaine³⁰) was born 1281. He was the Captain-General and Chief advisor to the young Edward III.

Henry was one of the principals behind the deposition of Edward II. He was the younger son of Blanche of Artois and Edmund Crouchback, 1st Earl of Lancaster, Earl of Leicester, who was a son of Henry III of England and Eleanor of Provence. Henry's elder brother Thomas, 2nd Earl of Lancaster succeeded their father in 1296, but Henry was summoned to Parliament on February 6, 1298/99 by writ directed Henrico de Lancastre nepoti Regis, by which he is held to have become Lord Lancaster. He took part in the siege of Carlaverock in July 1300.

Thomas was convicted of treason, executed and his lands and titles forfeited in 1322. But Henry, who had not participated in his brother's rebellion, petitioned for his brother's lands and titles, and on March 29, 1324 he was invested as Earl of Leicester, and a few years later the earldom of Lancaster was also restored to him.

On the Queen's return to England with Roger Mortimer, 1st Earl of March in September 1326, Henry joined her party against King Edward II, which led to a general desertion of the King's cause and overturned the power of Hugh le Despenser, 1st Earl of Winchester and his namesake son Hugh the younger Despenser. He was sent in pursuit and captured the king at Neath in South Wales. He was appointed to take charge of the King, and was responsible for his custody at Kenilworth Castle.

After Edward II's death Henry was appointed guardian of the new king Edward III of England, and was also appointed captain-general of all the King's forces in the Scottish Marches.

In about the year 1330, he became blind. He was succeeded as Earl of Lancaster and Leicester by his eldest son, Henry of Grosmont, who subsequently became Duke of Lancaster.

He married Maud Chaworth March 2, 1297.

Maud Chaworth (Sir Patrick²⁵, Patrick²⁶, Pain²⁷ de Chaworth_) was born 1282. They had the following children:

1. Henry Grosment of Derby Plantaganet was born 1299. Henry died 1361. Made Duke of Lancaster for excellent service in the Hundred Years War. When he died without issue, John of Gaunt inherited the Lancastrian lands by marrying Henry's daughter Blanche.
2. Blanche²³ Plantaganet (about 1305 - 1380) married Thomas Wake, 2nd Baron Wake of Liddell
3. Maud of Lancaster, (about 1310-1377); married William de Burgh, 3rd Earl of Ulster
4. Joan Plantaganet. (about 1312-1345); married John de Mowbray, 3rd Baron Mowbray
5. Isabel of Ambresbury Plantaganet., Abbess of Ambresbury, (about 1317-after 1347)
6. Eleanor Plantaganet (about 1318-1371/72) married (1) John De Beaumont and (2) 5 Feb. 1344/5, Richard FitzAlan, 10th Earl of Arundel;

7. Mary Plantaganet (1321-1362), who married Henry de Percy, 3rd Baron Percy, and was the mother of Henry Percy, 1st Earl of Northumberland.

Earl Henry of Lancaster died September 22, 1345 in Leicester, England. His body was interred Newark Abbey in Leicester. Maud died December 3, 1322. Her body was interred Mottisford Priory.

Lord Randolph de Neville (Robert²⁵, Robert²⁶, Geoffrey²⁷ de Neville, Robert²⁸ Fitz Maldred, Maldred²⁹, Dolfin Staindropshire³⁰, Uchtred fitz³¹ Maldred, Maldred³², Ealdgyth³³, Uchtred³⁴_) was born in Raby, Durham October 18, 1262.

He was the First Baron of Raby, Member of Parliament, served in French wars of Edward I and those in Scotland of Edward II, a benefactor of the Canons of Merton and Coverham, Lord of Middleham.

He married Eupheme FitzRoger (Lord Robert²⁵_) born in Warkworth, Northumberland 1267.

They had the following children:

1. Robert²³ de Neville.
2. Lord Ralph de Neville was born 1291.

Lord Randolph died April 18, 1331 in Coverham, England, at 68 years of age. Eupheme died 1329 in Warkworth, Northumberland. Her body was interred Staindrop.

Lord Hugh de Audley (James²⁵ de Aldithley, Sir Henry²⁶ de Audley, Adam²⁷, Liulf²⁸, Adam²⁹ de Aldithley_) was born in Audley, Staffordshire 1267. He was the Justice of Wales, Governor of Montgomery Castle, and Ambassador to France. He died in 1325.

He married Isolt de Mortimer (Edmund²⁵_) born in Wigmore, Herefordshire 1265.

They had the following children:

1. Earl Hugh²³ de Audley was born in Stretton Audley, Oxfordshire 1289. Earl died November 10, 1347 in France. He married Margaret de Clare in Windsor, Berkshire, 1317.
2. Alice de Audley was born 1300.

Sir Edmund Mortimer (Earl Roger²⁵ de Mortimer, Lord Edmund²⁶ Mortimer, Lord Roger²⁷, Ralph²⁸, Roger²⁹ de Mortimer, Hugh³⁰, Hugh³¹ Mortimer, Lord Ralph³² de Mortimer, Lord Roger³³, Raoul³⁴ de Warenne, Gautier³⁵ de St. Martin_) was born in Wigmore, Herefordshire 1306.

He married Elizabeth Badlesmere June 1316.

Elizabeth Badlesmere (Barthalamew²⁵ de Badlesmere, Gunselm²⁶, Bartholomew²⁷, Gunceline²⁸, Bartholomew I²⁹_) was born in Sussex, England 1313.

They had the following child:

1. Earl Roger²³ Mortimer was born November 1328.

King Edward III (King Edward II²⁵, King Edward I "Longshanks"²⁶_) was born in Windsor Castle, Berkshire, England November 13, 1312.

King of England (1327-1377) whose reign was marked by the beginning of the Hundred Years' War, epidemics of the Black Death, and the emergence of the Commons as a powerful arm of Parliament. In 1326, The French queen of England's Edward II invades her husband's realm which is effectively ruled by the earl of Winchester Hugh le Despenser and his son Hugh. Vowing revenge for the execution of the earl of Lancaster in 1322, Isabelle has the support of her paramour Roger de Mortimer, 39, earl of March, who has been outlawed by Edward at the urging of the earl of Winchester, and Edwards' supporters desert him. The king flees London October 2, taking refuge on the Glamorgan estates of the earl of Winchester. Isabella's forces capture both Despensers and put them to death. Edward tries to escape by sea, Isabelle's men capture him November 16, and they imprison him at Kenilworth Castle. In 1327, England's Edward II is effectively deposed by his wife Isabelle and her lover Mortimer, who have the parliament of Westminster force the king's abdication and replace him with his son of 14, who will reign until 1377 as Edward III.

Edward II is imprisoned at Berkeley Castle in Gloucestershire and mistreated in hopes that he will die of disease and malnutrition, but the king, now 43, has a strong constitution, so he is put to death with cruelty September 21; it is announced that he has died of natural causes. In 1328, Scottish independence gains formal recognition in a final treaty signed at Northampton between Edward III and Robert the Bruce, who is now disfigured with leprosy. The treaty is ratified by the marriage July 12 of Bruce's young son David to Edward's sister Joanna. In 1330, Edward III leads a baronial revolt against his regent Roger de Mortimer. He has Mortimer hanged and at age 17 begins a personal rule that will continue until his dotage in the late 1360's and nominally until his death in 1377. In 1332, Edward III and Edward de Baliol invade Scotland, Edward installs Baliol as the new king of Scotland, and they oblige David Bruce to flee to France.

In 1327 Edward III was proclaimed king by Parliament. During Edward's minority, England was nominally ruled by a council of regency, but the actual power was in the hands of the king's mother, Isabella of France, and her paramour Roger de Mortimer. In 1330 the young king took power into his own hands, had Mortimer hanged, and confined his mother to her home.

Edward began a series of wars almost directly after he had control of England. Taking advantage of civil war in Scotland in 1333, he invaded the country, defeated the Scots at Halidon Hill, and restored Edward de Baliol to the throne of Scotland. De Baliol was deposed and later attempts by Edward to establish him permanently as king of Scotland were unsuccessful. In 1337 France came to the aid of Scotland. This action was the culminating point of a series of disagreements between France and England, and Edward declared war on Philip VI, the French king. In 1340 the English fleet destroyed the larger French fleet off Sluis, the Netherlands, an action resulting in a truce which, though occasionally disturbed, lasted for six years.

War broke out again in 1346. Edward, accompanied by his eldest son Edward, Prince of Wales, invaded Normandy and won a great victory over France in the battle of Crecy. He captured Calais in 1347, and a truce was re-established. Edward returned home to England, where he maintained one of the most magnificent courts in Europe. About 1348 he instituted the Order of the Garter. The war with France was renewed in 1355 and again the English armies were successful. The Treaty of Calais, in 1360, gave England all of Aquitaine, and Edward renounced his claim, first made in 1328 to the French throne.

The English king continued to assert his will both domestically and abroad. In 1363 he concluded an agreement with David II of Scotland, uniting the two kingdoms in the event of David's death without male issue. Three years later he repudiated the papacy's feudal supremacy over England. He renewed his war with France, disavowing the Treaty of Calais. The English armies were unsuccessful this time; after the truce of 1375, Edward retained only a few of the former vast English possessions in France.

The king had, by this time, become senile. He was completely in the power of an avaricious mistress, Alice Perrers, who, with the help of Edward's third son, John of Gaunt, dominated England. Alice Perrers was banished by Parliament in 1376, but John of Gaunt continued his struggle for the control of England with Edward's successor and grandson, Richard II.

King Edward III married Philippa of Hainault (Count William V "The Good" of Hainault²⁵, Count John II of Hainault²⁶, Count John of Avesnes²⁷, Burchard of Avesnes²⁸) born in Valenciennes (then in Flanders, now France) June 24, 1311 and was the daughter of William I, Count of Hainaut and Jeanne of Valois, the granddaughter of Philip III of France.

Philippa accompanied Edward on his expeditions to the Kingdom of Scotland (1333) and Flanders (1338-40), where she won acclaim for her gentleness and compassion. She is best remembered as the tender-hearted woman who interceded with her husband and persuaded him to spare the lives of the Burghers of Calais (1346) whom he had planned to execute as an example to the townspeople following his successful siege. She acted as a regent on several occasions when he was on the continent.

Philippa had grown portly in her later years, and this added to the view most of her English subjects had of her as a friendly, homely, motherly woman whom the nation greatly loved. Philippa outlived 9 of her 14 children; two of whom were lost during the Black Death outbreak (1348).

On 15 August 1369 Philippa died of an illness akin to dropsy in Windsor Castle, and was buried at Westminster Abbey. By all accounts, her 40 year marriage to Edward had been happy, despite his taking a mistress, Alice Perrers, during the later part of it.

Through her children, Philippa reintroduced the bloodline of an earlier English King, Stephen, into the royal family. She was descended from Stephen through Matilda of Brabant, the wife of Floris IV, Count of Holland. Their daughter Adelaide of Holland married John I of Avesnes, Count of Hainaut, Philippa's paternal great-grandfather. Matilda of Brabant in turn was the great-granddaughter of Stephen through her mother Matilda of Boulogne, the wife of Henry I, Duke of Bra.

Philippa was also a descendant of Harold II of England through his daughter Gytha of Wessex, married to Vladimir II Monomakh of Kiev. His bloodline, however, had been reintroduced to the English royal family by Philippa's mother-in-law, Isabella of France, a granddaughter of Isabella of Aragon, the wife of Philip III of France. Isabella of Aragon's mother, Violant of Hungary, was a daughter of Andrew II of Hungary, a grandson of Géza II by Euphrosyne of Kiev, herself a granddaughter of Gytha. Through her maternal great-grandmother, Maria of Hungary, she was descended from Elisabeth of Bosnia (born before 1241), a daughter of Kuthen, Khan of the Cumens and his Slavic wife, Galicie of Halicz, thus bringing Western Asian blood into the English royal line.

The Queen's College, Oxford is named after Philippa. It was founded by one of her chaplains, Robert de Eglesfield, in her honor.

King Edward and Philippa had the following children:

1. Edward "The Black Prince" was born June 15, 1330. Edward died June 8, 1376. He married Joan of Kent.
2. Isabella²³ was born June 16, 1322. She died in 1379.
2. Joan (Joanna) was born in 1333. She died September 2, 1348.
